

Nächster Halt... Karlsplatz! is my ode to the Karlsplatz U-Bahn station. I worked near Karlsplatz for many years, so I had many opportunities to walk through this labyrinthine space.

This is a transit node for all sorts of people in Vienna, while for others it is a workplace. On the Staatsoper side of the station, you can often find musicians performing live (one more reason to pass through here).

I find it to be an excellent photography location. I love the interplay of natural and artificial light at the exits, the filtering effect created by the colored glass, and the playful reflections in the mirrored corridors.

I am fascinated by the interior design of the station. The wall decorations, the lighting, the ceilings, and the exit signs have a vintage vibe, while the shops are a mix of old and new.

I make the photos in full resolution available on my website. You can print them on 4x6" paper and use the Lay-Flat taped Photo Book method by Paul Treacy (instagram.com/treacyphoto) to recreate this zine, or you can make one with your own photos!

Enjoy!

Andrea Scaglioni

Website: andreascaglioni.net/photography

IG: instagram.com/andrea\_c\_scaglioni